I have been in Thailand for more than two months. The impressive feeling that I have never had before is with one person and that person is the King of Thailand.

In Thailand, wherever you go, you will see at the back of the cars, the labels written "We Love the King". From that phrase, I can really see how Thai people love their King.

And I also feel that there are many reasons for that.

The first reason is that the King loves his people.

When they face hardship, if the King knows, he will provide help. I know because I saw a story on TV. It was a story of a very poor student. Her father died a long time ago. Her mother was very ill and couldn't walk at all. Sometimes she didn't even have anything to eat. One day, she decided to write a letter to the King and asked him for help. The King immediately answered the letter and told her to hang on, to do good things for her mother, to be a good student and he would try to help her.

The second reason is that the King is a hard working person. I saw the picture of the King taking photographs of a rice field with Thai people. The King is very interested in his people's lives and he is very close to them. The King works so hard, how can the Thai people not love him?

The third reason, The King told his people that Thailand is now receiving many things from abroad. Therefore, Thai people need to conserve their own traditions and cultures, and they need to have their own ideas and thoughts that will lead Thailand to improvement. He also asked his people to love and help each other, so they will become prosperous together.

The King has given Thai people so much,
how can all the Thais not love him?
